GREAT FUTURE FOR THE SOUTHClaude N. Bennett Lectures
Before National Geographic Society Members.PANAMA CANAL NEEDEDMost of Cotton Produced in "Dixie" Yet the Price Is Fixed in Liverpool.

Any one hearing Claude N. Bennett, founder of the Congressional Information Bureau, lecturing on "The South To-day and To-morrow" before the National Geographic Society at the New Masonic Temple yesterday afternoon and last evening would have been led to the conclusion that there is no land in the whole world so vastly blessed with natural resources and boundless possibilities as the Southland. Mr. Bennett expatiated at length on the glories and beauties of the South, and his lecture, which was illustrated with numerous lantern slides and motion pictures, was frequently interrupted by enthusiastic applause.

The lecturer impressed it on the minds of his audience that it is the duty of any traveler to know his own country. He referred to the great benefit the South will derive from the building of the Panama Canal, which will bring the great ports of the world from 2,000 to 8,000 miles nearer to this country. In speaking of the immense trade possibilities with foreign countries, Mr. Bennett said our exporters and manufacturers should take the advice of our consuls in foreign lands and furnish foreign countries with the kind of goods they want and how they want them.

There is a tendency among our American exporters, continued Mr. Bennett, "to suit themselves instead of suiting their foreign customers."

Cotton Is King.

Speaking of the cotton industry, Mr. Bennett said there are 3,000,000 people engaged in the cotton industry, and that cotton is the greatest article of clothing in the world; that the annual cotton crop of the South is worth about $1,000,000,000; that the Southern States produce more than two-thirds of all the cotton produced in the world; that they are making peanut brittle out of cotton seeds, and that most of the olive oil sold today is nothing but cotton seed oil.

And yet, with all this preponderance of importance of the South as a cotton land, the price of the article is fixed in Liverpool, continued the speaker. "If our cotton farmers had the same spirit as the heads of our trusts, they could set their own price and could have the whole world at their feet."

The Southern ports, according to the speaker, are growing more rapidly than any other in the United States. Savannah being the largest naval stores port in the world. Referring to rice culture in the South, Mr. Bennett scored the people of the North, who, he said, did not know how to prepare rice for the table and did not even know how to eat it. The cattle industry brings about $200,000,000 to the South every year, and another $125,000,000 is derived from the dairy industry. The South also produces about three-fourths of the tobacco grown in the United States. Showing some of the fine roads of France on the screen, Mr. Bennett declared that the bad roads in the United States were responsible for American automobiles spending annually about $100,000,000 in Europe. Another picture showed convicts at work in the South building public roads. Speaking of convict labor, Mr. Bennett expressed hopes that Congress would soon pass a law preventing convict labor from competing with free labor. The lecturer paid a high tribute to Gifford Pinchot and all those men who are interested in the preservation of the forests and conservation of natural resources.

Measure Calling for Property Ac-

Citizens of Randle Highlands are up in arms over the provision in the bill calling for the acquisition of old Forts Carroll and Dupont for use as public parks. The bill provides that these forts shall be purchased, and the property owners within a certain distance assessed as benefits, to cover costs of the condemnation.

It is stated that when ground is purchased in the Northwest section Congress stipulates that such ground shall be paid for on the half and half principle, and that the bill is discriminatory.
